The transformation of this three-story apartment building to its original use as this country's first credit union was a true historical renovation.

Jewett Construction performed construction management services for the project. The interior includes rich original woodwork as well as period floor and wall coverings. The first and second floor were transformed into museum space; while the third floor houses a conference center and kitchen area. Jewett Construction principles took an ownership to the project by donating their time and efforts to the period furniture selections and purchases. The "America's Credit Union Museum" stands today as the only national museum in the City of Manchester.
